ABOUT THE CLYDESIDE DISTILLERY

The Clydeside Distillery is located within the Pumphouse building, which once controlled entry into the famous Glasgow Queen's Dock. The Pumphouse was originally designed to provide hydraulic power to operate the swing bridge, servicing the commercial dock, which witnessed the export of whisky exports with ships destined for all continents of the world.

Our family believes in making things well. It's why we've brought together the best of the old and the new at The Clydeside Distillery, using traditional techniques for making our exquisite new Clydeside Single Malt Scotch Whisky. The craftsmen distil out spirit by hand, using all the senses.

Whisky runs through the city's industrial heritage like the River Clyde itself. Which is why our gleaming new single malt scotch whisky distillery at the Queens Dock has a touch of the inevitable about it. We are delighted to bring distilling back to the city of Glasgow and celebrate the city's industrial heritage, which aided in the export and renowned reputation of Scotch whisky across the globe.

STOBCROSS STORY

The ancient state of Stobcross was named after a historic cross which once marked the route to Dumbarton Rock. On this road, in the 1600s, the Anderson family built a fine mansion, Stobcross House, later going on to lay out the prosperous weaving village of Anderston. With time comes change, and in 1875, with the industrial rise of the River Clyde, Stobcross House was demolished to make way for the Queen's Dock – one the beating heart of Glasgow's global maritime trade and fame.

Today in the Dock's former Pumphouse, built in 1877, that spirit of innovation continues with the combination of experience, passion and skill to create The Clydeside Distillery's first release, 'Stobcross' – a single malt, rooted in history. Time and tide might have changed the Clyde, but the city's spirit of innovation and creation still burns bright.

This Clydeside Single Malt is produced using clear water from Loch Katrine, 100% Scottish barley and then matured in the finest Oak casks.

Whisky info:

- Stobcross is a marriage of ex-bourbon and ex-oloroso sherry barrels - predominately ex-bourbon. First fill barrels used, American Oak for bourbon and European Oak for the sherry-oloroso butts. Un chill-filtered and natural colour. Packaging is 100% recyclable, the outer tubes have a perforation allowing for easy recycling of both the tube and the tin ends
- The New Make Spirit is filled into the barrels at 63.5%. Character of our new make is grassy, delicate, citrusy.
- Double distillation and final spirit cut of 71%
